New lords of the dance

NATIONAL DANCE INSTITUTE is sitting pretty. The nonprofit that runs arts programs in New York's public schools will announce this week the latest in a string of major donations: a $1 million gift from philanthropists Judy and Josh Weston. The money brings NDI's capital campaign to within $12 million of its $20 million goal.

The nonprofit is in the midst of completing a shiny new, $6 million home—an 18,000-square-foot, four-studio facility in Harlem. The group, which plans to move in this summer, expects to wrap up its capital campaign by 2013 and will set aside $5 million for its first endowment. At its annual gala in April, NDI will honor Alec Baldwin and others.

While many nonprofits are still struggling with a shaky economy, NDI, started in 1976 by ballet great Jacques d'Amboise, has found its footing: "We are in a moment where all stars have aligned," said Executive Director Kathy Landau.
